

OFFICE OF THE
INFORMATION &
PRIVACY COMMISSIONER
for British Columbia

Protecting privacy. Promoting transparency.

Announcement

September 23, 2015

OIPC launches new Privacy and Access Blog

VICTORIA– B.C. Information and Privacy Commissioner Elizabeth Denham is pleased to announce the launch of the OIPC's blog.

“Data today knows no borders – and technology is accelerating in ways we could not have imagined five or ten years ago,” says Denham. “Some say privacy is inconsistent with our modern world. I disagree. But given the reach and power of our digital society, I believe that it’s absolutely essential to take a proactive approach to our information rights. These rights are guaranteed for British Columbians under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Personal Information Protection Act.

“With our new blog, we hope to demystify, inform and share our work with you. We’ve created a space for in-depth commentary, the latest news about access and information, surprising facts about privacy and access in British Columbia, interesting quotes, tips about how to better protect your personal data and much more. We hope you’ll join the conversation.”

Click here to bookmark the OIPC blog.